VI. Reading Comprehension

MONROEVILLE, Alabama—Each April and May during "play season," as locals call it, the hotels in this town of 6,300 routinely sell out on weekends. Lines form at the restaurants. The charter buses carrying ticketholders stream off the highway.

For nearly all of the 26 years it has been produced, the play "To Kill a Mockingbird" has been a hit here in the hometown of the author, Harper Lee. Amateurs re-enact the novel as a drama in front of and inside the courthouse where Ms. Lee's father, the lawyer she shaped into Atticus Finch, once practiced.

But this year, the 18 performances sold out faster than ever—4,000 tickets were gone in five days—a surge that organizers attribute to the excitement over the news that Ms. Lee, at 88, will publish a second novel this summer, "Go Set a Watchman," said Sandy Smith of the Monroeville/Monroe County Chamber of Commerce.

Christopher Sergel's stage adaptation is faithful to Ms. Lee's portrayal of merciless racism in 1930s Alabama, and the townspeople over the years have performed it as far away as Israel and China. But on the opening night for this season, they performed it as they long have at the Old Monroe County Courthouse, where the audience sat in benches or watched from the back-standing room only—just as Ms. Lee describes the courtroom in Chapter 16 of her novel. Atticus Finch sat with his arm around the accused, Tom Robbinson. In the balcony, a black woman sang a mournful plea let her people go. Jem, Scout's brother, was brave and responsible.

The audience members included a busload from Florence, Alabama, five hours north, and people from Texas, Indiana, Florida, Louisiana and, as often happens, some international visitors. Goran and Katarina Olsson Trampe of Mariestad, Sweden, were touring the South and decided to come to the show after it has sold out; they were let in, they said, when they mentioned the distance they had traveled.

But Ms. Lee, who lives in an assisted living home three kilometers from the courthouse, has never attended the play, according to organizers at the Monoe County Heritage Museum. The museum has produced the show each year, but will hand over production next year to a non-profit the author founded after a licensing dispute. (By Jennifer Crossley Howard, the New York Times)

- 47. What is the possible topic of this citation?
 - (A) "Go Set a Watchman" Will be Published.
 - (B) The Monoe County Heritage Museum.
 - (C) The New International Tourist Spots at Monroeville, Alabama.
 - (D) "To Kill a Mockingbird" is Hit at Home.
- 48. Here are possible reasons that 18 performances sold out faster than ever EXCEPT
 - (A) Harper Lee will publish a second novel this summer at age of 88.
 - (B) The Monoe County Heritage Museum will no longer handle the production next year.
 - (C) The innovation of the audience seating that faithfully recreates the setting Harper Lee described.
 - (D) They performed it at the Old Monroe County Courthouse, on the opening night for this season.
- 49. Why do Israel and China appear in this report?
 - (A) They are metaphors indicating the distance and deviation.
 - (B) They are countries where the international visitors come from.
 - (C) They are the disputes of race issues.
 - (D) They sponsor the performances this year.
- 50. The possible reason that Harper Lee has never attended the shows can be inferred from the article, which is that
 - (A) she lives in an assisted living home three kilometers from the courthouse.
 - (B) people were let in to the shows without tickets because they said they were from Sweden.
 - (C) the disagreement on authorization of the novel reproductions.
 - (D) a black woman sang a mournful plea let her people go.
